- iii. The Alberta government has a system for school authorities to measure success and progress, called the Accountability Pillar. The Accountability Pillar uses 16 measures that show communities how schools and school authorities are performing each year. Schools and school authorities use the results to identify areas for improvement and help build their education plans. Typically we get this information in May. Because of COVID-19, diploma exams and provincial achievement tests are unavailable. The school reviewed the information provided by Alberta Education: student, parent and staff survey measures, and performance measures including dropout rates, high school completion rates, post-secondary transition rates, diploma examination participation rates, and Rutherford scholarship eligibility rates. Some of these indicators have decreased as a result of COVID. The efforts of teachers and support staff are committed to attaining better high school completion rates.
